Student: Det. David Margentino, Jr. (pictured)

Employer: Ocean County Prosecutor's Office, Toms River, NJ

David Margentino when asked to give a statement about his road to success he had a lot to say. “I started my career in law enforcement as a police dispatcher, moved on as a police officer assigned to patrol and now I am a Major Crime Detective with the Ocean County Prosecutor's Office. I have had great success as a Law Enforcement Officer which I attribute to my education from the Ocean County Vocational Technical School – Law and Public Safety Program. It has been instrumental in my success, giving me my foundation. There have been numerous times throughout my career where I have reflected on my training and education that I received at OCVTS. I would recommend this program to all up-and-coming law enforcement officers.”

Captain Rich Fennessy, Instructor for the students enrolled in their second year of the Law & Public Safety Program at OCVTS commented, “David has shown an astonishing career progression since his graduation from the Ocean County Vocational Technical School. He started his law enforcement career as a telecommunication operator, and progressed to a part-time special law enforcement officer class II. David continued his law enforcement career advancement as a full certified police officer and is presently an Ocean County Prosecutor's Detective assigned to the major crime division. David has progressed from the very bottom of the law enforcement hierarchy to the very top in less than five years. Detective Margentino is certainly one of the finest young men who have graduated from the OCVTS Academy of Law and Public Safety. He is clearly a role model for our students.”
